

IMPORTANT UPDATE. PLEASE DISTRIBUTE.

Dear Valued Customers and Suppliers:

We would like to provide you with additional information about the Aviall brand retirement that was previously announced on January 30th.

All of the products and services currently offered through Aviall now will be offered under the Boeing brand. This change is designed to provide our customers with a single entry and engagement point into the aviation industry's most integrated, optimized and responsive global supply chain ecosystem. The purpose of this communication is to confirm the timeline of brand retirement activities, to explain the minimal changes in effect for your operations and to address your critical questions.

TIMELINE

The Aviall brand will be significantly removed from the market by 30 June 2020.

For a smooth transition, changes can be made within your systems at your earliest convenience through June 2020. NOTE: This is not a legal entity change; it is a brand retirement, and therefore, most system requirements will not change.

- The Aviall name and logo will no longer be used in exhibit spaces.
- Aviall.com will redirect to shop.boeing.com/aviation-supply.

- In countries where we operate, the Aviall legal entity name* will change. While this has already happened in the U.S., Netherlands, France and UAE, beginning July 2020, we will begin changing the remaining Aviall legal entities via a phased

What's the difference between Boeing Distribution, Inc. (BDI) and Boeing Distribution Services, Inc. (BDSI)?

Boeing Global Services brought together leading parts and supply chain solutions providers to create a global aerospace distribution network. BDI (formerly Aviall) and BDSI (formerly KLX Aerospace) are legal entities with whom customers and suppliers complete certain Boeing transactions; they are both part of Boeing's market-leading distribution business.
